Schools Should Adopt the Use of Uniforms

Richard F. Daugherty

In the following viewpoint, the author describes the reasons that many schools, and one Nevada school in particular, favor student dress codes. Many faculty and parents believe that adopting uniforms has made their schools safer places where more learning occurs. Students wearing uniforms, they argue, are prevented from wearing gang attire, are less distracted by superficial fashions that focus on the disparity between the rich and the poor, and that may lead to peer conflicts, and are more inclined to focus on learning and teamwork.

Richard F. Daugherty, associate professor in the Department of Educational Leadership at the University of Nevada at Reno, is a former public school teacher and administrator. For the past decade, his research and teaching emphasis has been on education law.

"A safe and disciplined learning environment is the first requirement of a good school."

MLA Parenthetical Reference

Example for your source
A parenthetical reference to this Anthology/Collection might look like this:

...the end of your sentence (Daugherty [Page #]).

Customize the example:

Note: This is not the only way to write this parenthetical reference. For example, you might include the author or title of the work in your sentence already (see Rule 2). Please read the additional rules below to be sure you are writing your reference correctly.

What is a parenthetical reference?
A parenthetical reference is a reference within the body of your paper to one of the sources listed in your Works Cited list. It indicates to your reader exactly what you derived from the source, and specifically where it can be found. You need to write a parenthetical, or "in-text" reference, whether you quote the material directly from the source, paraphrase it in your own words, or refer to an idea derived from the material.

What typically goes in an MLA-style parenthetical reference?
The information that you need to include depends on what type of source the material comes from. For printed material, you normally only need to include the author(s) or title if there is...
