Gale Virtual Reference Library Searching Tutorial

A collection of reference and nonfiction eBooks

At home you will need the Gale Databases user name and password from the library’s Gold Sheet.
Select Advanced Search
Use your Keyword Organizer to build your search. Make sure you select Keyword.
Articles are sorted by Relevance.
You may limit your search by document type, publication title, or subject.
Click on the hyperlinked article title.
Skim read the article. Search terms are in red.

Laws Can Prevent Cyberbullying

There is no escape from cyberbullying.

Legislative ramifications will fight cyberbullying.

Cyberbullies should be held responsible for their actions.

Catherine Dunne

"Involving the law makes someone take responsibility for tackling cyberbullying."

In the following viewpoint, Catherine Dunne argues that legislation can reduce the threat of cyberbullying among youth. The author details the impact of cyberbullying and maintains that society must find ways to protect children from this danger. Dunne believes that cyberbullying involves an absence of empathy for the hurt being inflicted on the victim. The only way to discourage cyberbullying, the author contends, is to hold the offenders legally responsible for their actions. Dunne is a former teacher and the author of The Things We Know Now.

AS YOU READ, CONSIDER THE FOLLOWING QUESTIONS:

1. According to the author, how many teenagers have been victims of cyberbullying?
2. What examples of cyberbullying does Dunne highlight?
3. According to Dunne, what percentage of young people turn to self-harm as a result of cyberbullying?

Catherine Dunne, "Cyberbullying : We Need to Stop This Internet Torture," The Telegraph (UK). September 27, 2013. Copyright © 2013 by Telegraph. All rights reserved. Reproduced by permission.
Laws Can Prevent Cyberbullying

There Is No Escape from Cyberbullying

Legal Ramifications Will Fight Cyberbullying

Cyberbullyies Should Be Held Responsible for Their Actions

Catherine Dunne

“Invoking the law makes someone take responsibility for tackling cyberbullying.”

In the following viewpoint, Catherine Dunne argues that legislation can reduce the threat of cyberbullying among youth. The author details the impact of cyberbullying and maintains that society must find ways to protect children from this danger. Dunne believes that cyberbullying involves an absence of empathy for the hurt being inflicted on the victim. The only way to discourage cyberbullying, the author contends, is to hold the offenders legally responsible for their actions. Dunne is a former teacher and the author of The Things We Know Now.

AS YOU READ, CONSIDER THE FOLLOWING QUESTIONS:

1. According to the author, how many teenagers have been victims of cyberbullying?
2. What examples of cyberbullying does Dunne highlight?
3. According to Dunne, what percentage of young people turn to self-harm as a result of cyberbullying?

Catherine Dunne, “Cyberbullying: We Need to Stop This Internet Torture,” The Telegraph (UK), September 27, 2013. Copyright © 2013 by Telegraph. All rights reserved. Reproduced by permission.
Be sure to consult the Printing Tutorial before printing your article!